6 Steps to Take When the Media Get It Wrong

by Bruce Hennes, Hennes Paynter Communications

Recently, George Clooney publicly pointed his finger at The Daily Mail for publishing a story he said was false from start to finish. By doing so, the famous actor exponentially drove more readers to the original offending article than might otherwise have occurred. Did he do the right thing? What if this happens to you or your organization? What should you do when the media get it wrong?

The Power of Fiction

Why Rumors Outrace the Truth Online  New York Times

It's no surprise that interesting and unusual claims are often the most widely circulated articles on social media. Who wants to share boring stuff? The problem, however, is that the spread of rumors, misinformation and unverified claims can overwhelm any effort to set the record straight, as we've seen during controversies over events like the Boston Marathon bombings and the conspiracy theory that the Obama administration manipulated unemployment statistics. Everyone knows there is dubious information online, of course, but estimating the magnitude of the problem has been difficult until now.

Transparency

You're Not Going to Get Away With It  Huffington Post

Writer Michael Ramah finds it truly astounding that -- at a time when nearly everyone carries a device that can capture video, photos and audio, and then instantly upload that content online -- so many organizations still talk about transparency as if it is somehow optional. Or worse, aspirational. Because as worn out as the term has become, here is what transparency really means: You're not going to get away with it. So you better get in front of it.

Non-Verbal Communications

Most leaders today are aware of the need to look confident, powerful, and assertive, but fewer understand the impact of empathy and warmth. And this may be more of a career-limiting factor than they know. As organizations move toward more collaborative cultures, your success as a leader increasing depends on your ability to make team members feel valued, respected, and included. While power and confidence are nonverbally displayed by expanding into height and space, when you want to encourage collaboration, you’d be wise to replace those status cues with warmer ones - and that starts by keeping your body relaxed and open.

The Adverb Is Not Your Friend

Why Adverbs, Maligned by Many, Flourish in the American Legal System  Wall Street Journal

No part of speech has had to put up with so much adversity as the adverb. The grammatical equivalent of cheap cologne or trans-fat, the adverb is supposed to be used sparingly, if at all, to modify verbs, adjectives or other adverbs. As Stephen King succinctly put it: "The adverb is not your friend." Not everybody, however, looks askance at the part of speech. Indeed, there is at least one place where the adverb not only flourishes but wields power-the American legal system.

CLE Season is Upon Us

Loss of a senior partner...financial problems...
legal malpractice lawsuits...partner disputes...high profile litigation...
natural disasters...defective products...workplace violence...
compromised client information &
confidentiality violations...criminal accusations

If you think you, your firm or your client doesn't need a crisis plan, think again.

As almost any general counsel of a large, publicly traded, consumer-oriented company will tell you, legal controversies today are tried in the Court of Public Opinion -- at least as much as in any Court of Law. Every organization, especially large, publicly-traded corporations, has much to gain (or lose) by the way a legal controversy is positioned in the media. Because the value of a company's reputation is immeasurable -- and perhaps its largest uninsured asset -- a corporation loses when the brand image is tarnished, even if the corporation technically wins at trial. Furthermore, since most legal controversies are settled prior to trial, the Court of Public Opinion has arguably become the most important battleground affecting not only good will and market share, but legal bargaining power and settlement negotiations. Managing this battleground, therefore, has become integral to many corporations' legal strategies.

In these days of 24/7 instant news, attorneys and their clients simply cannot wait until a legal decision is rendered. They must be prepared to vigorously defend their situation in a wide variety of venues, as well as media outlets.

In the first portion of this seminar, attorneys will hear about the canons and case law surrounding the relationship between PR activities, PR counsel and the management of the media, often a critical component of case strategy in litigation practice.

The remainder of the seminar includes: establishing & maintaining "control of the message"; when a reporter calls - making your points and not just answering questions; what reporters expect; what newsmakers should expect; defining and creating key messages; reporter's agenda vs. the attorney's agenda; the fundamental differences between print, television and radio interviews and how each require different skill sets; dealing with the press proactively and reactively; "off the record, not for attribution" and other advanced techniques.

Also discussed are the ethical and practical perils of talking with the press in the midst of a client crisis or pending case, causing many lawyers to insist on a strict "no comment" to the press, which the public almost always interprets "no comment" as an admission of whatever charge is made, which may not serve the client's best interests. This seminar will offer attorneys a wide variety of strategic and tactical alternatives to "no comment."
For information about any of the CLEs above, please call Bruce Hennes at 216-321-7774.

Crisis/Media Training & Coaching

Your organization is in trouble...your CFO has been arrested...the company truck was in an accident...hackers hijacked your database...the pressure is on...the camera crew is at the door....

Do you know how to handle a high-pressure TV interview? Will your messages survive the editing booth? Do you know where to put your hands? What to wear? Do you look at the camera - or at the interviewer?

It takes a lifetime to build a reputation and only a few seconds to destroy one. In a split second you could find yourself in a position where you need to know how to handle the media or be a public spokesperson. Would you know what to do or how to respond?
More important - do you have the necessary skill set to "manage the message" and advance the cause of your business, agency or nonprofit?

You can be certain the senior executives at virtually all of the Fortune 500 companies have been through media training, working with a media coach to learn how to handle adversarial situations with journalists and stakeholders. Perhaps it's time for you to learn this specialized set of survival skills?

We also offer spokesperson & presentation training and coaching, designed to improve your daily interactions with colleagues, employees, investors, journalists and other outside parties.

Call Bruce Hennes, Barb Paynter and the staff at Hennes Paynter Communications today at 216-321-7774 and talk to us about media, spokesperson and presentation training and coaching for you, your top execs -- or anyone who might have to hold the fort down with a reporter until the appropriate spokesperson can be located. For more about our training services, click here.

Ask us, too, about how we can help you create, implement and test a crisis communications plan. For more information about those services, click here.
